A GIRL OF THE LONG AGO.

An old man sits at eventide when the summer's sun is low.
His thoughts, like birds of beauteous wing, go back to the long ago.
He looks upon a golden tress which like a sunbeam lies
In his wrinkled palm, and tears will start unbidden to his eyes.

The tress recalls a girlish form he sees it through his tears;
A merry voice rings out from where are grouped the vanished years;
Yes, from the past two eyes look forth with lovelight all aglow,
And now before him stands once more a girl of the long ago.

You'd smile to see her standing 'mong the maidens of today,
Her garments of a quaint old style forever passed away,
And in the attic, hid away—a secret 'tis, you know
Is an old, old dress, the wedding gown of a girl of long ago.

There are silver buckles on her shoes, a dainty little pair;
The old, old man looks down and smiles, as if they're really there;
He saw them trip the "Money Musk" when the harvest moon was low,
What said he on the homeward ride to that girl of the long ago?

No matter what, the wedding bells rang joyously one morn
When o'er the clover came the wind to kiss the silken corn,
And he who oft with beating heart had played the boyish beau
Stood up and blushed beside his bride—the girl of the long ago.

Methinks that while he sits and rocks, with life at its decline,
Still for his eyes and his alone her silver buckles shine,
I cannot tell you when she died; this only do I know—
She is his bride today as when he won her long ago.

A little miss steals forth sometimes and climbs upon his knee;
Her fingers smooth his snowy locks, her eyes are fair to see;
He kisses her with youthful zest, his own eyes all aglow,
Because she is the image of a girl of the long ago.

—T. C. Harbaugh in Good Housekeeping.

SIMPLICITY.

Once upon a time on an island, which the sea has long since engulfed, there lived a king and a queen who had one son. The king was a great king; his drinking cup was the very largest in all the realm; his sword the heaviest; he fought and he drank royally.

The queen was a beautiful queen; she had so many wonderful cosmetics, and they wrought so mysterious and wonderful a charm that she looked not a day older than forty.

The son was a fool. "A fool of the most pronounced type," said the brilliant lights of the kingdom. When he had reached the age of sixteen the king, his father, took him to the wars. These wars were carried on in order to exterminate a certain neighboring nation that dared to possess too much territory.

Here it was that Simplicity showed himself a dunce. He saved twenty-four women and thirty-six children from slaughter, and every stroke of the sword which he was himself forced to give caused him to weep bitterly, while the battlefield itself, running over with blood and encumbered with the dead, filled his heart with such deep pity that for three days he could not eat.

So you must see that he was a dunce, my dear.

When he was seventeen he was obliged to assist at a great festival given by the king to all the magnates of his kingdom. Here again he committed many blunders. He contented himself easily; he ate sparsely of the great banquet spread before him, and he swore—not at all! His glass would have remained always full before him had not the king himself, to save the dignity of the family, emptied it slyly from time to time.

At eighteen, as he began to grow a beard, he was noticed by one of the queen's court ladies.

Court ladies are dreadful creatures, my dear.

This particular court lady wished for nothing less than to be kissed by the prince! The poor boy did not dream of such a thing; he trembled when she spoke to him, and hid himself the moment he saw the edge of her skirts in the gardens. The king, who was a good father, saw what was passing and laughed in his sleeve. But as the lady still pursued the prince, and the kiss was still withheld, he blushed for such a son and himself gave the kiss asked for, always, to be sure, for the dignity and honor of his family and his race. "Oh, the little fool!" said the king, who was a man of spirit!

It was at the age of twenty that Simplicity became completely idiotic. He met a forest and fell in love! In those olden times people did not try to beautify the trees by pruning and cruel incisions. The branches grew as they listed; God alone had them in charge, and moderated the roots and managed the saplings. Simplicity's forest was an immense nest of verdure, interspersed here and there by majestic avenues. The moss, drunk with the dew, flourished wantonly; the eglantines spread their pliant arms, sought each other and played mad pranks around the mighty trunks of the trees. The great trees themselves, standing calm and serene, twisted their roots in the shade and mounted tumultuously upward to kiss the rays of summer. The green grass flourished, while in their hurry to blossom the daisy and the scorpion grass, growing confused at times, clung together on the broken trunks of fallen trees. And all these branches, all these grasses, all these flowers, sang; all mingled and pressed closely together to gossip more at ease, to whisper low together of the loves of the corolla. A breath of life floated low down in the shadowed coppice, giving voice to each sprig of moss.

The forest held high carnival. The ladybirds, the beetles, the dragonflies, the butterflies—all the beautiful lovers of the flowering hedges—had gathered at the four quarters of the forest.

There they established their little republic; the footpaths were their guards; the streams, their streams; the forest, their forest. They lived luxuriantly at the foot of the trees, on low branches, in the dried leaves; lived there as though at home, quietly and by right of conquest. They had, like good citizens, abandoned the higher branches to the robins and the nightingales. The forest, that had hitherto sung in all its branches, in all its leaves and flowers, sang now with the insects and with the birds.

In a short time Simplicity became an old friend of the forest. They chatted so happily together that it robbed him of the last vestige of sense. When he left the forest to shut himself again within four walls, whether seated at his table or lying in his bed, he was always dreaming.

At last, one beautiful morning, he suddenly abandoned his apartments, and went and installed himself under the old foliage. There he chose for himself an immense palace. His salon was a vast glade. Long dark green draperies ornamented the periphery: 500 flexible pillars, interlaced like a fine gauzy veil, and of the bright hue of the emerald, towered high in the air. The roof itself was the large dome of changeable colored satin, starred with golden nails. His sleeping room was a delicious boudoir, filled with mystery and fragrance. The flooring and the walls were hidden under under a soft carpet of an inimitable pattern. The alcove, bored through a rock by some giant, had walls of pink marble and a floor of ruby powder. He had also his bathroom, a living fountain of pure water, a crystal bath lost in a bouquet of flowers. I will not tell of the thousand galleries which crossed each other in this palace, nor of the wondrous landscapes, nor of the gardens. It was one of those royal habitations that God alone knows how to fashion. The prince, therefore, could now be as foolish as he pleased. His father thought him changed into a wolf, and so sought another heir more worthy of the throne.

Simplicity was very busy during the next few days after settling himself in his new home. He made friends with his neighbors, the beetles and the butterflies. They were kind neighbors, with as much bright intelligence as man. At first he had some difficulty in understanding their language, and he soon perceived that he would have to educate himself anew. He learned the concise language of the insects. A sound indicated a hundred different objects, following the inflection of the voice and the length of the note. Soon he lost the habit of speaking the language of his race, so poor in spite of its wealth of words. The way of living of his new friends charmed him. He felt supremely ignorant compared with them, and resolved to go and study at their schools.

He was more reserved in his relations toward the mosses and the pines. As he was not yet able to understand the language of the blade of grass and of the flowers, his ignorance caused a certain reserve in his intercourse with them. But the forest did not eye him coldly. It understood that he was a simple soul and that he held the most amiable intercourse with the denizens of the wood. No one hid from him. It often chanced that he would surprise, at the end of a glade, a butterfly ruffling the collar of a daisy. Soon the hawthorn overcame her bashfulness, just enough to give lessons to the young prince. She lovingly taught him the language of perfume and of color. The purple corolla hailed Simplicity on his awakening, the green leaves told of their wild midnight dances, the grasshopper confided to him in a whisper that he was madly in love with the violet.

Simplicity had chosen for his bosom friend a golden dragonfly, with a slender waist and quivering wings. This beauty was a dreadful coquette; she sported near him, seemed to call to him, then flew lightly from his hand. The great trees, who saw these maneuvers, rebuked her vigorously and solemnly whispered that she would come to a bad end.

Simplicity suddenly became restless. The ladybug, who was the first to perceive the sadness of her friend, gently sought to win his confidence. He answered sadly that he was as happy as ever. He rose now with the dawn, and wandered through the glade until dusk. He softly held back the branches, searched the thicket and the shadows formed by the leaves.

"What is our pupil seeking?" demanded the hawthorn of the moss.

The dragonfly, wondering at this desertion of her lover, concluded that he was mad for love of her. She came and roguishly flattered about him; he did not perceive her. The big trees had judged her rightly; she consoled herself quickly with the first butterfly at the crossway.

The leaves were sad as they watched the young prince, questioning each tuft of grass and searching with an eager eye the long avenues. They heard him complain of the impenetrable thickness of the brushwood, and they said, "Simplicity has seen Flower-of-the-Water," the Undine of the spring.

Flower-of-the-Water was the child of a sunbeam and a dewdrop.

She was so limpidly beautiful that the kiss of a lover would cause her death. The perfume of her breath was so sweet that a kiss from her lips would cause the death of her lover. The forest knew this, and with jealous care it hid its adored child. It had given her as a sanctuary a spring shaded by a thick cluster of trees. There, in the silence and the shadow, Flower-of-the-Water glittered in the midst of her sisters. Idly she floated with the tide, her small feet half hidden by the ripples, her golden head crowned with liquid pearls. Her smile was the delight of the water lilies and the gladioles. She was the soul of the forest. She lived without a care, knowing naught of earth but her mother, the dew, nor of the heavens, but the sunbeam, her father. She knew herself beloved by the ripple that cradled her, by the branch that shaded her. She had a thousand wooers, but not one lover. Flower-of-the-Water was not ignorant of the fact that she would die of love; she was pleased with the thought, and lived in the hope of such a death. Smilingly she awaited the well beloved.

One night, by the light of the stars, Simplicity beheld her at the winding of a glade. He sought her during a long month, hoping to meet her behind every tree trunk. Sometimes it seemed to him that he saw her gliding through the coppice; but he found only the great shadows of the poplars, swayed by the winds of heaven.

The forest became silent now; it mistrusted Simplicity. It pressed low its leaves, and threw dark shadows of night on the young prince's path. The danger that threatened Flower-of-the-Water made it melancholy; it gave no more soft caresses, no more loving prattle.

Undine came again to the glade, and once more Simplicity beheld her. Wild with longing, he pursued her. The child, mounted on a moonbeam, did not hear the sound of his footsteps. She flew onward, light as a feather floating in the wind. Simplicity ran, but could not overtake her. He wept bitterly—despair filled his soul; but still he pressed onward, while the forest watched with growing anxiety this insensate race. The bushes barred his way; the thorns held him in their sharp embrace, grimly arresting his progress—the entire forest was in arms to defend its child. Still he kept on, though the moss grew treacherous and slippery beneath his feet. The branches interlaced more firmly and faced him, immovable as a wall; fallen trunks of trees threw themselves in his path; the rocks rolled down of their own volition and strove to entrap him; the insects nipped his heels; the butterflies, brushing his eyelids with their wings, blinded him.

Flower-of-the-Water, neither seeing nor hearing him, still flew onward. Simplicity, with anguish, felt that the moment was approaching when she would again vanish, and desperate, breathless, he dashed on.

He heard the old oaks call angrily after him: "Why did you not tell us that you were a man? We would have hidden away from you; we would have refused to teach you, so that your shadowed eyes would have failed to see Flower-of-the-Water, the Undine of the spring. You came to us with seeming innocence, the innocence of the dumb animals, and now today you show us the spirit of man. Look, you are crushing the beetles, you tear our leaves, you break our branches; the spirit of selfishness is sweeping you away—you would steal our very soul!" And the hawthorn added: "Simplicity, pause in pity. If Flower-of-the-Water should desire to breathe the perfume of my starry blossoms, why not leave them to grow freely on my branches?" And the moss said: "Stay, Simplicity; come dream on the velvet of my fragrant carpet. In the distance among the trees thou canst see Flower-of-the-Water playing. Thou shalt see her bathe in the spring and casting glistening pearls around her throat. Thou canst share the joy of her glances; stay with us; thou shalt live and see her." And the whole forest cried: "Stay, Simplicity! A kiss will kill thee—do not give that kiss. Dost thou not know? The evening breeze, our messenger, has he not told thee? Flower-of-the-Water is the celestial flower, whose perfume is death. Alas! poor child, her destiny is a strange one. Have mercy, Simplicity; do not drink her soul on her lips."

Flower-of-the-Water turned and saw Simplicity; she smiled and beckoned him to draw near, as she said to the forest, "Here comes my well beloved!"

Three days, three hours, three minutes had the prince pursued her; the words of the oaks still rumbled around him—he felt half tempted to turn and flee. Flower-of-the-Water already clasped his hands; she tiptoed on her tiny feet; her smile was reflected in the young man's eyes.

"Thou didst long delay," murmured she. "My heart recognized thee in the forest; I climbed on a moonbeam and I sought thee—three days—three hours—three minutes!"

Simplicity was silent, scarcely daring to breathe; she bade him sit by her on the brink of the fountain; she caressed him with her glances, and he! long time did he gaze!

"Dost thou not recognize me?" whispered she. "I have often seen thee in my dreams; I went to thee—thou didst take my hand; then together we would walk silent and trembling. Didst thou not see me? Dost thou not remember thy dreams?" and as at last he found voice to speak, "Do not say anything," she interrupted quickly. "I am Flower-of-the-Water and thou art my well beloved! We shall die!"

The great trees bent forward the better to behold the young lovers; they trembled with anguish and whispered each other that the souls of the lovers would soon fly away! All the voices grew hushed. The blade of grass and the oak were overcome with pity; the leaves had forgotten their anger; Simplicity, the lover of Flower-of-the-Water, was now the son of the forest.

She rested her head on his shoulder, and together they gazed into the stream; they smiled into each other's eyes! Again, looking upward, they watched the golden dust that trembled in the rays of the setting sun. Slowly their arms entwined—slowly—slowly. They awaited the coming of the evening star, when they would blend together and fly away forever!

Not one single word ruffled the harmony of their ecstasy. Their souls, breathing through their lips, mingled together.

The day faded; the lips of the lovers grew ever nearer. A terrible anguish held the forest motionless and rigid. Huge rocks, from which the water sprang, threw heavy shadows around them; they alone were radiant in the growing light!

At last the star appeared in the blue above and their lips met in the supreme kiss, and through the oaks there quivered a long sob—their lips had met, and their souls took wing!

On the edge of the stream they found Simplicity smiling in the sleep of death. His feet dipped in the ripples, his head reposed on the grassy bank. Closely pressed to his lips was a small pink and white blossom, wondrously exquisite and of a penetrating perfume.—Translated from the French of Emile Zola, for Short Stories, by Marion Ogden.

MRS. GRAHAM'S
CUCUMBER and ELDER FLOWER CREAM.

Is not a cosmetic in the sense in which that term is popularly used, but permanently beautifies. It creates a soft, smooth, clear velvety skin, delicately dull; use gradually makes the complexion several shades whiter. It is a constant protection from the effects of sun and wind, and prevents sun burns and freckles and blackheads will not come while you use it. It will assure the face far better than soaps and cosmetics, and smoothness of the skin, many times a little spot. Invigorates and tones the tissues and forms perfect circulation. It makes the face radiant with clearness and smoothness of the skin, many times a little spot. Every lady, young or old, ought to use it, as it gives a more youthful appearance to any lady and that permanently. It contains no oil, "poison" or alkali, and is as harmless as dew and as beautiful to the skin as dew is to the flower. Price $1.00, at druggists and hair-dressers, or at Mrs. Gervaise Graham's establishment, 105 Post street, San Francisco, where she treates ladies for all blemishes on the face and figure. Ladies at a distance treated by letter. Send stamp for her little book "How to be Beautiful."

"Toilettes" for September is a superb number of that elegant Fashion Journal. Each issue seems to be more beautiful than the preceding; it appears to be growing in size as well, for it has now 20 pages of choice engravings, instead of 16 as formerly, besides a handsome cover, yet the price 15 cents for a single copy or $1.50 per year, remains the same. It is quite evident the publishers are determined that "Toilettes" shall be the favorite Fashion Magazine in this country, and it is just as evident that our lady friends are of the same opinion, as they are all buying it. All first-class book and news dealers have it on sale one month in anvance. Published by TOILETTES PUBLISHING CO., 126 West 23d street, New York.

Shopping for Amusement.

The French critic, musician and government official, Romieu, was fond of joking. One of his diversions—amusing, but not to be commended—was to go into some shop where he was not known and perplex the clerks by his questions and remarks. One day he went into a glove store and told the clerk that he wished to make a purchase, but must apologize for his poor French. If she would listen carefully he hoped to make himself intelligible. He had always found the clerks in Paris so intelligent and amiable, he said, that one need not be discouraged even if he did not speak the language very well. He would like a pair of gloves—kid gloves. Did she understand?

All this was said in perfect French, with irreproachable accent and idioms.

"Certainly, sir," murmured the astonished clerk.

"Ah, then I will persevere; kid gloves, pearl gray—do you understand—pearl gray?"

"Yes, sir, you speak French with perfect"——

"A thousand thanks. This is another proof of the inexhaustible amiability and patience which I have noticed in the shops of Paris. With two buttons—you comprehend?"

"Yes."

"The Parisians are so quick to catch one's meaning! And will you kindly stretch them and put in some glove powder? What is the price? I wish my command of French permitted me to express my thanks for the promptness and courtesy with which I have been served."

He paid for his gloves and departed without a smile.—Youth's Companion.

An Ox Yoke Punishment.

There is an old farmer out in Jersey who has as great a detestation of flirting as was ever cherished by the mikado himself. It was a great shock to him one evening at church when he caught his fourteen-year-old daughter exchanging glances and smiles with a neighbor's son a couple of years older. The old gentleman mused over the problem all the way home, and finally hit upon an expedient which he only awaited the opportunity to put into practice.

This was not long in coming. As he turned a corner of the road the next day he caught a glimpse of the young couple on the road ahead of him, walking along, hand in hand, and even as he paused, speechless, he saw them exchange a kiss. That settled it.

With a few strides he had overtaken the culprits and was marching them off to his barn, which stood in a prominent position close by the high road. A shout brought out the hired man, and in a twinkling the old granger had slipped an ox bow over his victims' heads. Then he seated them on the doorstep and kept them there for one mortal hour, calling the attention of all passers by to "my two calves I'm a breakin in."

At the end of the time he released the prisoners, who made all haste to put as much distance between each other as possible.

And now they don't even speak when they pass by.—New York Recorder.

Her Husband in Luck for Once.

"I was once kidnaped by a pretty woman," was the way George W. Louthan, of the Smoky City, began a story at the Lindell. "I was standing in front of a popular resort in Denver, chatting with some boon companions, when the lady marched up to me and said, severely, 'George, I have been looking for you, and before I could make reply she took my arm and marched me off to a carriage. Mechanically I got in, and she drove off with me, berating me soundly meanwhile. I said nothing, but kept wondering who she could be. She appeared to have a roster of my faults, for she enumerated them all. Presently she stopped before a rather pretentious dwelling, and I thought it time to ask for an explanation. She turned upon me quite indignantly, stopped, looked hard at me, then stammered forth an apology. She had mistaken me for her husband. I accepted her apology on condition that the lecture she had given me should not be warmed over for the man who looked like me. She promised, and I escaped."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The Temptation.

To go out of doors in rough weather is no strong, but we are, many of us, compelled to face rough weather frequently. Diseases which arise from a chill are peculiar to no season of the year. This is true therefore there should be in the closet of every household what? Not an unmedicated stimulant absolutely devoid of anything but negative action, but a tonic combining, in the effective form of an invigorant and an alterative, the quality of defence against changes of weather. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters has three or four properties that no other article of its class possesses. Not only does it relieve the complaints which it eventually cures, it fortifies the system against the bad effects of changes of temperature fatally and too often shown in the deadly form of "la grippe;" it produces a radical change in the wretched condition of a system peculiarly liable to be attacked by it, and it tends to provide against the danger resulting from an impoverished condition of the blood and a disordered state of the liver or bowels.

A Little Girl's Experience in a Lighthouse.

Mr. and Mrs. Lorin Truscott are keepers of the Bay Light house at Sand Beach, Mich. and are blessed with a daughter, four years old. Last April she was taken down with Measles, followed with a dreadful Cough and turning into a fever. Doctors at home and at Detroit treated her, but in vain, she grew worse rapidly, until she was a mere "bundle of bones." Then she tried Dr. King's New Discovery and after the use of two and a half bottles, was completely cured. They say Dr. King's New Discovery is worth its weight in gold, yet you may get a trial bottle free at Ed. Wagner's Drug store.

A SENSATION ABROAD.

HOW AN AMERICAN DISCOVERY HAS AWAKENED EUROPE.

The Credit is Due to a Citizen of the United States, but the Benefits are Shared by the Entire World.

LONDON, May 20.—Considerable excitement exists among physicians in Europe as to the nature of the most dangerous of modern diseases, and whether it can be cured. Ten years ago Bright's disease of the kidneys was pronounced incurable by almost the entire medical faculty. To-day many of them are in doubt, and nearly all the most advanced declare that it not only can be regulated, but that it can be absolutely cured.

High authorities have taken steps to ascertain the exact views of the leading physicians of Europe on the subject, and their condensed opinions are given herewith:

Sir Morrell Mackenzie, the leading physician of England, said: "I would say generally that Bright's disease is curable, but the man or woman who is troubled with it must be careful of every action, almost of every thought."

Dr. MacLagan, physician to the Princess Christian and other members of the Royal Family, says: "The name, Bright's disease, covers a multitude of complaints connected with the kidneys, particularly those complaints which are due to inflammation. How to arrest its progress is to answer the question as to what the latest cure may be."

Dr. William Edward Robson, physician of the Royal Navy, declares: "Like the majority of my professional brethren, I have long regarded Bright's disease as incurable. I think so no longer. Hundreds of my patients have been cured by the use of Warner's Safe Cure, and I am willing to acknowledge and recommend, thus frankly, the value of this great remedy."

Dr. Samuel Mills, of Charing Cross, said: 'Bright's disease is not necessarily incurable. The duration of life will not be seriously impaired if proper precautions are taken."

Dr. Andrew Wilson, of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, asserts: "Warner's Safe Cure is of a safe character and perfectly reliable."

Prof. Gerhardt, of Berlin, says: "Bright's disease is curable except in cases of a shrinkage of the kidneys, and even then the patient may live from six months to twenty-five years, during which period improvements in health may be secured by the use of remedies insuring the normal action of the heart."

Dr. Hoesli, of Berlin, says: "I have used Warner's Safe Cure myself, as I have been the victim, on taking the least cold, of rheumatism and palpitation of the heart. This sensibility has disappeared, also the action of the heart is quieter."

Prof. Winternitz, of Vienna, says of Bright's rheumatismal disease: "It is curable, and in its other forms life may be prolonged."

Dr. Gustav Weber, of Dessau, Germany, affirms: "By the use of 15 bottles of Warner's Safe Cure my general health has been restored, and I have completely cured myself of Bright's disease of the kidneys."

Dr. Dugardin Beaumetz, of the Academy of Medicine, Paris, said: "The danger in Bright's disease results from the crippled condition of the kidneys, which no longer take out of the system poisons resulting from organic substances. The treatment consists in helping the inefficient action of the kidneys."

Dr. E. H. Whirsel-Hierlimann, of Whippengen, Switzerland, makes the following remarkable assertion: "I am a living example that Bright's disease is curable. I suffered with that complaint for years, and know that the improvement, appetite and strength have been caused through the use of Warner's Safe Cure."

The above facts prove what has been asserted by Mr. H. H. Warner, both in America and abroad, for years, that Bright's disease of the kidneys can be cured. When this claim was first made it was scouted by physicians, but to-day the leading doctors and scientists in both hemispheres agree that Bright's disease not only may be regulated, but can actually be cured. This is both cause for gratitude to the thousands of helpless sufferers who have been restored to health and also for all patriotic people that this discovery for the worst known of all diseases emanated from America and was put forth by an American. Instead of feeling that the hand of death is laid upon the sufferer when the presence of this terrible disease is first discovered, there is ample assurance from the statements of the above-named physicians as to the cause and cure that no sufferer need despond.

To Preserve

The richness, color, and beauty of the hair, the greatest care is necessary, much harm being done by the use of worthless dressings. To be sure of having a first-class article, ask your druggist or perfumer for Ayer's Hair Vigor. It is absolutely superior to any other preparation of the kind. It restores the original color and fullness to hair which has become thin, faded, or gray. It keeps the scalp cool, moist, and free from dandruff. It heals itching humors, prevents baldness, and imparts to

Perfectly Clear.

In Doctor Pierson's description of life in the southwest as he saw it many years ago—"before the war"—he speaks often of the peculiar turns of speech there prevalent. He was once present at an ecclesiastical meeting, where motions were piled upon each other until matters were in a frightful muddle. Finally the moderator was appealed to for a decision.

He rose from his seat, as became a presiding officer thus appealed to, and lifting his lank form till his head was among the rafters of the low school house he hesitated a moment and then said:

"Brethren, my decision is that you are all ahead of the hounds."

Doctor Pierson confesses that he did not fully comprehend the meaning of the words, but he could not help seeing that the decision was perfectly clear and satisfactory to the assembly.

Only One Clean Thing.

When Jones was at Oxford he was a most excellent fellow, and only had one enemy—soap. He was called Dirty Jones. One day the wag Brown went into his rooms, and remonstrating with him on the untidy, slovenly and dirty state of everything, said:

"Upon my word, Dirty, it's too bad; the only clean thing in your room is the towel!"—London Tit-Bits.

Suspicious.

Doctor—I believe you have some sort of poison in your system.

Patient—Shouldn't wonder. What was that last stuff you gave me?—Exchange.

Be sure and put a box of Ayer's Pills in your satchel before traveling, either by land or by sea. You will find them convenient, efficacious and safe. The best remedy for costiveness, indigestion and sick headache, and adapted to any climate.

A fire on Silver street, San Francisco, last Sunday morning at 3 o'clock, came near destroying a valuable three-story flat belonging to Mrs. J. C. Haubert, mother of A. J. Haubert of this place. The surrounding buildings were badly burned, while Mrs. Haubert's property escaped with a bad scorching.

A valuable horse belonging to Mrs. J. A. Poppe fell into a deep creek last Tuesday and was badly injured about the head. The accident was caused by the bank of the creek giving away under the weight of the animal, who had approached too near its edge. The horse, although attended by two veterinary surgeons, died two days after the accident.

A large plaster of paris center piece, in the parlor of Prof. and Mrs. Abshire, fell with a crash, last Sunday morning. The noise which followed awoke almost everybody in the neighborhood and for a time it was thought there had been another powder mills explosion or an earthquake. A fine marble-top table, a hanging lamp and a number of ornaments were demolished by the center piece which weighed ten or fifteen pounds.

The trees in the Plaza are dying for want of water. With the waters from half a dozen artesian wells running to waste in this place this is a most remarkable state of affairs. If the trees in our Plaza, which thanks to a fomer Board of Trustees have attained a healthy growth, are watered a few times for another season or two, they will be able to take care of themselves with an occasional plowing and trimming. There are some we know in this town who want no Plaza, no bridges, no street sprinkling, no gas, no sewers, no nothing. Can it be possible that our City Fathers are carrying out the ideas of these people who ought to have died before they were born.

DEATH OF JUDGE D. O. SHATTUCK.

He Passes Peacefully Away at the Ripe Old Age of 92 Years.

Judge David O. Shattuck died at his home near Sonoma last Thursday afternoon at twenty minutes after five o'clock. The deceased had attained the ripe old age of 92 years, four months and twenty-seven days. For the past few months the Judge had been failing fast and his death was not unexpected.

Judge Shattuck was a remarkable man in more ways than one. He was possessed of great mental as well as physicial capacity, and notwithstanding his extreme old age his mind was as clear up to a few months of his demise as it was half a century ago. He was a forcible writer, a keen jurist and one of the most honest, upright and conscientious of men, and in passing away he leaves a proud heritage to his numerous sons, daughters, grand-children and great grand-children in a spotless and honorable career of nearly a century.

Judge Shattuck, after holding many positions of high trust in Mississippi, sailed for California in 1849 and landed on these shores in the spring of 1850, and a few months later bought a farm in this valley, and engaged in the practice of law in San Francisco. In 1854 he was elected District Judge of San Francisco and held the office several terms, and won the admiration and respect of the Bar for his able and just decisions.

He was also a devout member of the Methodist Church and at one time was a licensed minister.

The deceased was born in Connecticut, but when nineteen years of age emigrated to South Carolina and later on moved to Mississippi.

He leaves a family of ten married sons and daughters residing in various parts of the Pacific Coast States and Territories.

The funeral will take place tomorrow from the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Mary E. Spencer, and will proceed to the Methodist Church, where the funeral services will be held. The remains of the good old man will then be laid to rest in Valley Cemetery beside those of his wife, who died in 1875.

Kicked by a Horse.

Jas. Burns, Sr., was kicked by a horse on Friday of last week and came very near dying from his injuries. The animal had recently been purchased in Alameda and brought up to this place and turned loose on Mr. Burn's farm. On the day of the accident Mr. Burns went into the pasture and caught the horse and while in the act of applying a linament to the animal's sore shoulder, the vicious brute wheeled suddenly and planted both hind feet with great force against Mr. Burns' left side over the heart. He made his way to his house where he was kindly cared for by Capt. and Mrs. Boyes until the injured man's family who were in Alameda arrived at his bedside. The day after the accident it was thought he would die from his injury, but he subsequently rallied and is now mending slowly.

The High School.

The Sonoma High School reopened last Monday in the public school house under the principalship of Prof. Abshire, who is the right man in the right place. The Board of High School Trustees are taking a lively interest in the school, which is constantly increasing in numbers. Owing to this interest Sonoma now enjoys educational advantages second to no town of its size in the State. The public school building has recently been repaired and put in perfect order.

Heavy Yield of Hay.

C. F. Carmer of El Verano raised this season from an acre and a half of land nine and a half tons of hay. The land, which is average Sonoma Valley soil, is located one mile west of Sonoma. The hay before being cut stood six feet high.

Grass Fire.

A grass fire broke out on the Senator Fair ranch near Sears' Point last Sunday and destroyed several hundred acres of pasturage. By great efforts the house and outbuildings of the dairy on that part of the ranch were saved.

If the ladies would abandon cosmetics and more generally keep their blood pure and vigorous by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, naturally fair complexions would be the rule instead of the exception, as at present. Pure blood is the best beautifier.

AN EXCITING PRIMARY.

Republican Voters of Sonoma Sit Severly Down on Cady and Maxwell.

The Republican primary which was held in Sonoma yesterday afternoon was one of the most exciting that has ever taken place in the old town. The Republicans of Sonoma selected a ticket composed of three of their leading citizens to represent them at the County Nominating Convention which will meet in Petaluma next Wednesday. This ticket was represented by Judge J. M. Cheney, Judge Breitenbach and J. E. Poppe. It did not, however, meet with the approbation of Geo. Maxwell, a voter of San Francisco, and his satellite Supervisor Cady and an opposition ticket was put up to defeat the will of the people of Sonoma town. This ticket, although composed of two of Sonoma's best citizens, was overwhelmingly defeated. The fact that their fight was made by outsiders, who had no business in interfering in this election, proved disastrous to them and they were borne down by the very men who endeavored to send them to the County Convention. Their defeat was a veritable Waterloo.

The vote was as follows:

J. M. Cheney	68
F. Brietenbach	51
J. E. Poppe	50
S. Schocken	21
J. H. Seipp	17

The three delegates elected are in favor of D. D. Davisson for the Assembly as against M. K. Cady.

The result in San Luis precinct was as follows:

T. S. Glaister	28
S. J. Agnew	14
S. A. Ringstrom	14

Of the above Glaister and Agnew are avowed Davisson men.

In Glen Ellen Harry Weise and J. M. Zane were elected. Weise is for Davisson and Zane for Cady and the Devil is for the hindmost man.

Band Concert.

The people of Sonoma Valley who wish to enjoy a rare treat and spend a pleasant evening will do well to be present on the occasion of the concert and hop to be given by the Sonoma Valley Brass Band on next Friday evening the 26th inst. at Weyl's Hall. The programme consists of 14 numbers; a series of fine selections by the band, a vocal duet by Mr and Mrs. Cadenasso, a cornet solo by Mr. H. Maxwell, a comic descriptive piece entitled, "The Musical Circus;" vocal solo, Mr. G. Cadenasso; a baritone solo by Claude Johnson; the whole to conclude with a pantomime. Dancing will then follow. After reading the above, all will coincide with us that this affair will be the event of the season. The price of admission is only 50c.

Mr. Hugh Maxwell, the leader of the band, is one of the finest musicians in the State.

from top to toe. How could she have dared to raise even her thoughts to the heights on which they moved? Which of them would have deigned to descend to her, a poor little orphan, sheltered by the pity of her cousin?

Thus set apart and averse to all flatteries, she led her own life, amid the festivities and the constant noise and confusion of the house.

But one evening she discovered among the crowd a newcomer—blond and handsome like herself, and like herself sad, timid and embarrassed. At once a secret sympathy attracted her toward young Mario. It seemed to her that she might be able to comfort him with her words, for surely he cherished a deep sorrow in his heart, since his fine face, never brightened with lively color, a

OLD GRIMES' SON.

A "Chip of the Old Block."

Old Grimes' is dead! but his son John
Lives just across the street;
He wears a cheerful countenance,
And shoes upon his feet.

He has a pleasant chubby wife,
And dimpled daughter Kate;
He wears a ventilated hat,
And never sits up late.

He thinks there never lived a girl,
As fair as his young daughter;
He's temperate, an I only drinks,
Apollinaris water.

He travelled once to Germany,
And went way up the Rhine;
The time his father left to him,
He carries rain or shine.

His very dogs are happy when,
They hear him lift the latch;
He has a fine old library,
And a splendid melon patch.

He's served his country well and long,
To Congress he's been called;
He's growing now a little stout,
And also somewhat bald.

For widows, and for orphans sad,
His heart with grief does burn;
He keeps an eye upon the boys,
When his fruit begins to turn.

His days are spent most peacefully,
With his lot he's content;
He would scorn to cheat the poor,
Or dun folks for their rent.

He is a friend to all in need,
And sturdy as a rock;
And those who know, declare that he's
"A Chip of the Old Block."

A PLEA FOR MOTHERS.

An Amendment Offered to the Advice of a Woman Lecturer.

A few evenings ago a Boston woman journalist, who writes the essays about bookmarks, gluten bread, dress reform corsets and the like for the woman's column of a Sunday paper, read a lecture to a parlor full of Harlem women. Her subject was "How to Bring Up Children."

One thing that she insisted on was that children should be taught to "do things," to be prepared for emergencies.

"For example," said she, "I would teach a child what to do in case of a fainting fit. I say to my girls:

"'Girls, I am not much of a hand at fainting, but if I do take a notion to faint some day when you are about, get me some water. Pour it on my head and face. Cold water, girls, not hot water.'

"I'm sure that if the unexpected comes, and I fall in a fainting fit some fine morning, the girls, if they happen to be near, will know what to do and will do it promptly."

"May I interrupt you for a moment?" asked a little brown haired woman, who looked to be about fifty.

"Why, certainly," answered the lecturer.

"Well, what I wish to do," said the brown haired woman, "is to take issue with you on this proposition of yours that it is the proper thing to instruct children what to do to their mothers when they faint. On other points I have nothing to say. Maybe you are right in the general proposition that children should be taught to do things, but as to this matter I wish to utter a warning word, to offer an amendment, so to speak.

"I used to think as you do. I remember as well as can be how I used to tell my girls to do the very thing that you say you told yours to do. I thought as you do, that it would be a shame to leave any person who should faint in the presence of my girls go without proper care. So I used to say: 'Remember, girls, to use water. That's the thing when a baby faints.'

"Well, one day some one came to my house and told me that a little boy had been hurt in the next yard. I was almost ill at the time, but just the same I rushed out to the scene. The little chap was badly hurt, and it took me quite awhile to get him in such a way that I could safely leave him. But the time came at last, and I started for home.

"When I was within about a rod of my own house I grew dizzy and saw stars and then fell in a heap in the gutter.

"A couple of Irishmen picked me up, each taking an arm, and dragged me up my front steps and laid me out on the piazza. Then they rang the bell, and when my daughter Isabelle came to the door one of them pointed at me and said:

"'Good avenin, miss, an is that yer mother there, lyin all in a hape dead fainted away?'

"Isabelle gave one look and then called out to her two sisters. 'Quick, girls, ma's fainted.'

"'After that the deluge.' Yes, that tells the story. Isabelle got the ice pitcher, Mary a foot tub and Kate a ten quart tin pail. I consider it almost a miracle that I'm alive today.

"Of course I'm telling all this from hearsay. I didn't know anything from the time that I fainted until I heard Kate frantically crying out: 'Water! More water! Quick, Isabelle, more water!' and just after that one of the Irishmen saying, 'Be aisy, darlint, or ye'll be after drownin yer ould mother!'

"Wet! Well, that doesn't begin to tell the story. I was soaked, and great streams of water were running off the piazza and down the stairs.

"'You did just right girls,' I said as soon as I could speak. 'You did just what your mother told you to do, but don't do it again.'

"Then I got down on my knees and wrung out my skirts as well as I could and while I was in that position I could hardly keep myself from saying, 'Oh Lord, I thank thee that they didn't call out the fire department.'

"Now, I've taken up lots of your time, but I wished to make an amendment to your proposition. What I would propose is that every mother save her own self from the danger of drowning by saying to her girls when she bids them pour water on 'fainters,' 'Do sure my dears to try the remedy for the first time on somebody else than your own dear mamma.'"—New York Times.

Telling About It.

An old lady is said to have been asked how to tell good indigo. "Powder the indigo," said she, "sprinkle it upon cold water, and if it is good it will either sink or swim. I have forgotten which."

It was the same with Aunt Charity's eggs.

"Jest take a dozen of 'em—no, a half a dozen of 'em—no, it's a dozen—well, raaly, I can't say, but it's either a dozen or a half dozen—and you put 'em in a pailful—no, a half pailful—part full—no, it's a pailful—no—well, well, it's either a pailful or a half pailful of water—and the good eggs will swim on top—no, the good eggs will sink to the bottom—no, that's not it—the good eggs will swim—no, no, I delare, I don't raaly know, but, anyway, the good eggs will either sink or swim."—Housekeeper.

Satan's Sign Manual.

A Bates county farmer saw a bolt of lightning strike in the center of one of his fields, and being curious to see the effects of the stroke visited the spot. He found the subtle fluid had left its mark in the shape of an enormous "D" of an angry red color, and had no doubt that it was the sign manual of the arch fiend himself.—Kansas City Journal.

"German Syrup"

A Throat and Lung Specialty.

Those who have not used Boschee's German Syrup for some severe and chronic trouble of the Throat and Lungs can hardly appreciate what a truly wonderful medicine it is. The delicious sensations of healing, easing, clearing, strength-gathering and recovering are unknown joys. For German Syrup we do not ask easy cases. Sugar and water may smooth a throat or stop a tickling—for a while. This is as far as the ordinary cough medicine goes. Boschee's German Syrup is a discovery, a great Throat and Lung Specialty. Where for years there have been sensitiveness, pain, coughing, spitting, hemorrhage, voice failure, weakness, slipping down hill, where doctors and medicine and advice have been swallowed and followed to the gulf of despair, where there is the sickening conviction that all is over and the end is inevitable, there we place German Syrup. It cures. You are a live man yet if you take it.

F. G. Nagle SOLD OUT!

NAGLE IN COURT.

In the Justice's Court of Santa Rosa Township, Sonoma County, California.

J. W. RAGSDALE, Plaintiff, vs. F. G. NAGLE, Defendant.

The plaintiff for cause of action against the defendant, alleges: That on the 16th day of November, 1888, said defendant, F. G. Nagle, received from G. W. Call the sum of one hundred (100) dollars, the property of the Sonoma County Abstract Bureau; that of said money said defendant, Nagle returned to said Bureau the sum of $20 only, and retained, and ever since has retained, the balance of said $100 to wit, $80 for his own use, and that no part of said $80 has ever been paid; that said Bureau assigned said claim to plaintiff.

For a further and separate cause of action plaintiff alleges that defendant is indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $80 for money had and received from G. W. Call, November 16th, 1888, for the use and benefit of the Sonoma County Abstract Bureau which claim has been assigned to the plaintiff, and that no part of the same has ever been paid.

Wherefore, plaintiff prays for a judgment against defendant for the sum of $80 and costs.

RUTLEDGE & PRESSLEY, Attorneys for Plaintiff.

Dec 9, 1891, complaint filed, summons is sued and served Dec. 15, default and judgment entered against defendant for $80 and costs. Dec. 16th, Nagle pays judgment.

TO

Book Agents

Cleveland vs Harrison

THIS IS THE TIME for torchlight processions, wild cheering, songs, speeches, red fire and enthusiasm. The whole country is aroused. Recognizing the immediate demand for political literature, we have issued a magnificent Republican campaign book.

The Lives of Harrison and Reid

with beautiful portraits and full information about the great issues of the day. Protection, Reciprocity, The Silver Question, etc., by A. Kinley, Rusk, Senator Hale, Secretary Noble, Murat Hal tead, etc. Also, in a separate vol me the:

Lives of Cleveland & Stevenson

with and cute portraits and biographical sketches; also a splendid discussion of the Democratic principles by Powerful Democratic Statesmen, proving the soundness of Democratic principles.

Thousands of agents will coin money with these splendid books. They will sell where nothing else would. Don't wait to write, but send 25 cents in coin or 50 cents for both outfits, showing the beautiful engravings.

Beware of Cheap John Books.

Secure the official editions with the great Republican and Democratic leaders' views on the Tariff and Silver questions.

Everybody Wants these Books.

Merchants, Farmers, Mechanics and all classes will eagerly buy them. They will sell like wildfire. The greatest chance for money-making ever offered. Address quick
